NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE,

IN LOVE AND SINCERE RESPECT,

BY

HER GREAT NEPHEW,

JOSEPH FOSTER.

INTRODUCTION.

IT gives me great pleasure to lay before the members of the Forster Family the result of my researches in compiling the following account of their Pedigree, in which work I have been assisted in no small degree by the Head of nearly every branch mentioned; and I have to thank all, both for their readiness in supplying the required information, and in subscribing towards its publication.

It may, perhaps, not be out of place to mention that the dates contained in the Registers of the Society of Friends prior to March 1753, require to be adjusted to the present style; thus, in the Register, "1st of 7th month, 1700," does not mean the 1st of July, but the 1st of the literal 7th month, viz. September. This will account for any apparent discrepancies which may be noticed in confirming the dates by the Registry.

It will be observed that the name of Foster is spelt at the beginning of the book Forster, but as the descent is clearly proved by the Registers of the Society of Friends, there is of course no doubt that it is correct; but how or why the spelling was changed, I have no means of ascertaining.

To prevent any misapprehension, it should also be stated, that when the parents of any one who has married a member of the family are mentioned, the maiden name of the mother is sometimes given: thus, on page 21, "Maria Hayes, daughter of John Tyerman and Mary Mitford his wife," does not mean Mary Mitford Tyerman his wife, but Mary Tyerman née Mitford his wife.

I have found it necessary to make an Addenda, to insert further particulars relating to the family of Sampson Foster, Esq., of Stamford Hill, London, which I had not received at the time the portion referring to that family was printed. These will be found at p. 75.

I have also inserted a brief sketch of Robert Foster of Hebblethwaite Hall; and, as the Genealogy has occupied less space than I expected, I have added an Index, which I hope will prove useful.

* Extract from the Obituary of the Gentleman's Magazine, for the year 1800, Vol. 70, Part 2, p. 957.

"31st August, 1800.—Mr. Abraham, of High Street, St. Giles. The circumstances attending whose death ought to be communicated to the public. He was found, wholly insensible, under a coach at the coach stand, at the corner of King Street, Bloomsbury. The watchmen and the persons who conveyed him to the watch-house at St. Giles, concluded that he was in a state of intoxication; but that was by no means the case. He was subject to fits, and it is probable that in one of these paroxysms he had fallen. There was a severe contusion on his forehead, which, it is supposed, was in consequence of the force with which his head fell upon the wheel. In his pocket were several letters, the superscriptions of which denoted his residence; but though the wound on his head, and the great effusion of

i. Henry, went to India, and has not since been heard of.

i. Hannah, living in 1812, at 3, Roxburgh Place, Edinburgh; married —— Ratcliffe; she died about 1820, and all the family are deceased except two daughters; if they survive, which is uncertain, the elder of the two, Hannah, has been twice married, but has no issue.

ii. Anne, married James Staveley, a barrister, of a Lancashire family; she went out to India, accompanied by her sister, Sarah Elizabeth, who married in India a Colonel Bowler; they came over to England, when she was presented at Court, about thirty years ago. Mrs. Staveley died in India.

blood, pointed out the necessity of an immediate application to his friends, and for chirurgical assistance, he was suffered to remain for several hours at the watch-house, and it was only on the probability of a speedy death, that the least intimation was given to his friends. In this lamentable condition, his wife and family came, just in time to witness his end. If proper assistance had been administered in time to the deceased, it is probable that he might now be living to protect his family. In consequence of this barbarous neglect, the superior officers of the parish have very properly resolved that in similar cases, the person shall be immediately conveyed to his home or to the workhouse; and if to the latter place, that the medical attendant of the parish shall be instantly called to the spot—a poor amends for such shameful neglect of a fellow-creature.

"Mr. Abraham was once a very considerable slopseller in Bishopsgate Street, and possessed great property, but was induced by a friend to embark in a project that nearly ruined him. This was an extensive tannery, and to be conducted by a steam engine and expensive works, fitted up on the site of the mansion house of the Proctor family, at Tottenham, which, on the failure of Mr. A., was sold piecemeal, and the house purchased, 1799, by Mr. Andrews, Blackwell Hall, factor. By industry and prudence, he had recovered from the shock, and though without the prospect of obtaining his former rank in life, was able to support his family in ease and comfort, when this melancholy accident and the misconduct of the people who had him in their care, put an end to his life."

iv. Ellen Clare, married Dr. Clarke, and had one daughter, who is believed to be now married. After the death of Dr. Clarke, she resided at Exeter, and before her marriage she resided with Lady Fitzgibbon, but is now dead.

APPENDIX.

Robert Foster.

THE FOLLOWING IS EXTRACTED FROM A MEMOIR OF ROBERT FOSTER, WRITTEN BY HIS SON, MYLES BIRKET FOSTER, IN 1860.

ROBERT FOSTER, son of Dodshon and Elizabeth Foster (see page 62), was sent at an early age to John Jenkins' school at Yealand Conyers, where he remained for several years: he completed his education at the Free Grammar School at Sedbergh.

When he was about eighteen years old he went to sea, and after making three voyages to the West Indies with Captain Roper, in the "Marquis of Rockingham," he was appointed storekeeper in Antigua by his grandfather and great-uncle, Myles and James Birket, who were then West India Merchants.

About the end of May, 1776, he entered on board the brig "Endeavour," Lieut. Francis Tinsley commander, carrying four guns, which was fitted out in Antigua to cruise against the American privateers. On the 20th June, 1778, he left the "Endeavour" at Spithead, and went on board the "Defiance," 64 guns, Samuel Cranston Goodall, Esq., commander. On the 8th July he entered as master's mate on board the "Jupiter," 50 guns, Francis Reynolds commander.

From an entry in his log-book, we learn that on the 21st October, 1778, the "Jupiter" had a severe engagement with the "Triton," 64 guns. Mr. Roberts the master, and eight men were wounded. Mr. Roberts died the following day, and Robert Foster succeeded him.

On the 21st April, 1779, he received Captain Reynolds' acting orders as lieutenant of the "Pelican," 24 guns, Henry Lloyd commander, in the room of Mr. Sumpter deceased.

In August, 1779, his only brother Myles died, at Ulverston. In September he obtained leave to visit his friends in Lancaster, which visit brought forth the following letter, supposed to have been written by the Vicar of Lancaster :—

"Last Sunday, the quakers at their meeting-house were thrown into a state of great surprise by the appearance of a young man in the uniform of a lieutenant of a man-of-war. This young man's father and grandfather are quakers, and, being the principal merchants of the place, bred him to the sea, and afterwards appointed him their storekeeper in the West Indies, where he was when the American dispute began; and being moved by the spirit (not the peaceable one of a quaker, but the true spirit of an Englishman), he made up his accounts, quitted his store, collected together a few sailors from the Lancaster ships, laid aside the quaker, mounted a cockade, and joined a Lieut. Tinsley, then fitting out a small armed vessel against the Americans, in which he had several severe actions; and coming over in her to Portsmouth, got himself recommended to Captain Reynolds as an officer likely to show him some business, was with him in the 'Jupiter' of 50 guns, when they went close alongside the 'Triton,' a French 64, at the very time she saw her consort going off; and in the heat of that close and desperate action, on the master being killed, Captain Reynolds immediately sent for Foster from his quarters, and appointed him Master; and managing the ship for the remainder of the action, as well as acquitting himself afterwards, to the satisfaction of the captain, upon a vacancy happening lately at Lisbon, where Captain Reynolds had the command, from that just and honest principle of rewarding merit, Captain Reynolds deprived himself of a useful officer by appointing Foster Lieutenant of the 'Pelican.'"

Foster got leave on the "Pelican" coming to England to visit his friends at Lancaster for a few days, where he has withstood all the remonstrances and solicitations to quit the service, and has gone back to his ship. I hope he will earn preferment, and be a credit to the place; as well as an example to some others of that society to break through the principle established by them, 'to enjoy all the advantages of peace, but to leave it to others to fight their battles.'"

On his return to Portsmouth, the "Pelican" had probably gone to sea without him, as it appears from his log-book that he went on board the "Hornet" sloop-of-war, 14 guns.

He remained in the navy a very short time after his visit to Lancaster. His friends, who had been greatly distressed by his desertion from those peaceable principles in which he had been carefully educated, no doubt laboured earnestly while he was with them to induce him to leave the service; and their labours, seconded by his own convictions, seem to have wrought a wonderful change in this young officer. He became a man of peace, and in after life avoided conversation about his naval career, and certainly never gloried in his former exploits.

Soon after he left the navy, his maternal grandfather wanting a manager for his estate near Sedbergh, in Yorkshire, which Robert Foster afterwards inherited, he went to reside at Hebblethwaite

Hall, and settled down as an agriculturist. He erected a mill on the estate, for the better employment of the poor; established a school for their education; and became a sort of father, physician, lawyer, and judge among his dependents and country neighbours.

He continued an active, useful, and benevolent life at Hebblethwaite, in the enjoyment of domestic happiness and of social intercourse with the worthies* around, who were attracted by his accomplished mind and genial disposition, to his retired but hospitable dwelling, till the autumn of 1812; when he removed to Newcastle-on-Tyne, to be near his children, who had most of them removed to that locality. Here he maintained the same character of active usefulness and benevolence as long as his health permitted.

In 1824 he had a slight attack of paralysis, after which his bodily powers gradually gave way.

The following is extracted from the Annual Monitor of the Society of Friends:—

"Robert Foster was a man of extensive classical attainments, yet of unaffected humility. His inflexible integrity and watchful

* Extract from a letter of ROBERT SOUTHEY to RICHARD DUPPA, ESQ.:—

February 23rd, 1806.

"Oh! Wordsworth sent me a man the other day, who was worth seeing; he looked like a first assassin in Macbeth as to his costume—but he was a rare man. He had been a lieutenant in the navy; was scholar enough to quote Virgil aptly; had turned quaker, or semi-quaker, and was now a dealer in wool somewhere about twenty miles off. He had seen much, and thought much; his head was well stored, and his heart in the right place.

"It is five or six and twenty years since he was at Lisbon, and he gave me as vivid a description of the Belem Convent, as if the impression on his memory was not half a day old. Edridge's acquaintance, Thomas Wilkinson, came with him. They had been visiting an old man of a hundred in the vale of Lorton, and it was a fine thing to hear this Robert Foster describe him. God bless you.

circumspection of conduct were conspicuous, and endeared him to various ranks. In fulfilling the duties of social life, he was an amiable example; he was especially careful not to speak evil of any one, and to discourage the practice in others. In the exercise of Christian hospitality he was liberal, but those who could not return the obligation were the peculiar and tender objects of his care. His last illness, which was one of long continuance, he bore with much patient resignation and fortitude, and though always diffident of speaking of his religious attainments, and for several weeks before his decease deprived of the power of speech, yet he evinced great tranquility and sweetness of spirit, in the near prospect of his final change."

The following tribute to his memory appeared in the Kendal Chronicle of June 30th, 1827:—

"The late Robert Foster was a scholar, a gentleman, and a philosopher, in the most expanded sense of the word, and last and most valuable of all, a Christian. It may with justice be said of him, that he was a man cautious in advising, scrupulously honourable in promise, and capable above most men, when mystery was to be unravelled, confusion brought into order, doubt made certain, or truth conspicuous. He has lived to a good old age, and has gone down to the grave with a character free from stain or reproach, dearly loved by many, and esteemed by all."
